

One of the most charming events of the week was the marriage on Wednesday of Miss Berta Couch and Mr. Edward L. Massic at the Prospect Avenue Christian church. The preceding days and those that followed were gloomy and cheeriess, but on Wednesday the sun shone radiantly and the air was mild and spring-like. The pretty church was crowded with friends of the young couple. The altar was banked with spreading palms, their tropical green forming the sole decoration. Preceding the arrival of the bridal party Miss Grace Witch sang "If Thou Couldst Know," and their entrance was heralded by Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Mrs. Ella Cady Daniels. The ushers, Mr. Allen Epperson, Mr. Arnold Shanklin, Mr. Will Borland and Mr. John P. Withers, were fol-

The afternoon tea, in all probability, will never become in America the simple, informal, delly affair that it is in its native habitat. Although it has been naturalized for many years, it still receives the deference always accorded to English importations. It is an occasion for formal invitations, elaborate preparation, artificial illumination and all the concomitants of a full-fledged reception. The most notable feature of the tea given by Mrs. Granville M. Cole, Miss Cole and Miss Lynette Cole hast Monday afternoon was the decorations, which were unusually beautiful and effective. In the north parlor, where the receiving party was stationed, the golden glow of the yellow shaded lights feil on masses of yellow daffoils gleaming amid the palms and smilax draperies. The south parlor were a festive dress of red carnations, whose rich color was heightened by the light shed through red shades. The prevailing tone in the dining room was violet and the table bore a tail centerplece of hyacinths, thickly wreathed at its base with violets. From the mirror upon which this rested broad bands of violet satin ribbon were stretched to the edges of the table. The receiving party included Mrs. W. R. Hogsett, Mrs. Clynn Banks, Miss Ada Reese and Miss Corby of St. Louis, Mrs. J. G. Gallagher, Mrs. Lynn Banks, Miss Ada Reese and Miss Corby of St. Joseph Miss Ellen Hart Talbot presided at the tea table in the south parlor, in the dining room at either end of the large table, Miss Frances Sloan, of St. Louis, served cherry glace from a block of ice, and Miss Chouteau dispensed checolate with the assistance of this One Wins and Miss Margaret Cole. never become in America the simple, in-formal, daily affair that it is in its native

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Bird gave a large dancing party at Lyceum hall last Monday evening, on which occasion some novel features in decoration were carried into effect. The hall has been the scene of many notable and brilliant gatherings, but has seldom worn a more attractive aspect than on this occasion. Between the street door and the reception hall one passed through a series of fretwork arches hung with tapestries, which with the vista beyond of diyans and low tables, Oriental rugs and draperies, lent a decidedly Moorish effect to the whole. The broad stairway leading to the dancing floor was flanked by ranks of palms and pots of blooming azaleas, pink and white. These colors were repeated in the draperies, which dothed the gallery front and the wall above a broad divan at the opposite end. Decorations in the dinlagroom were entirely of pink roses.
